From the first number, the cavalry drill of Troop A, under Capt. J. H. Washburn, to the final battailon parade in command of Maj. J. F. Hodgson, the ten events on the program were thrilling and spectacular. Company B went through a musical bayonet drill under Capt. Claude Burlingame.

Two sections of Battery A were in bivouac on one side of the field. At a signal from Capt. L. C. Vogt the shelter tents were struck, the horses harnessed, the guns and caiseons limbered, and the field circled at a gallop. There was a charge toward the reserved seats, the guns wheeled around and simultaneously fired two black powder blank charges. The two sections left the field just twelve seconds after the first signal. Capt. Harry Shilling commended the commended the control of the control of the seconds after the first signal. Capt.
